CONFIDENTIAL
Enron Corp.
Case No. EC-2002-01038
Doc No. E05E47E33
Date: 01/15/2003
ENRON CORP. - PRODUCED PURSUANT TO FERC SUBPOENA.
SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER. CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT REQUESTED.
CONFIDENTIAL - SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER

From: Susan M Scott <susan.scott@enron.com>
Sent: Fri, 7 Apr 2000 09:14:00 -0700 (PDT)
To: Gary Stadler <gary.stadler@enron.com>
Subject: WORD OF THE DAY

The Word of the Day for April 7 is:

gadzookery ■■ \gad-ZOO-kuh-ree\ ■■ (noun)
: the use of archaisms (as in a historical novel)

Example sentence:
"Get rid of the gadzookery," Bruce's editor cautioned. "Mirabella can perfectly well say 'please' instead of 'prithee.'"

Did you know?
"Gadzooks . . . you astonish me!" cries Mr. Lenville in Charles Dickens' Nicholas Nickleby. We won't accuse Dickens of gadzookery ("the bane of historical fiction," as historical novelist John Vernon called it in Newsday magazine), because we assume people actually said "gadzooks" back in the 1830s. That mild oath is an old-fashioned euphemism, so it is thought, for "God's hooks" (a reference, supposedly, to the nails of the Crucifixion). But it's a fine line today's historical novelist must toe, avoiding expressions like "zounds" and "pshaw" and "tush" ("tushery" is a synonym of the newer "gadzookery," which first cropped up in the 1950s), as well as "gadzooks," while at the same time rejecting modern expressions such as "okay" and "nice."

CONFIDENTIAL
Enron Corp.
Case No. EC-2002-01038
Doc No. E05E47E33
Date: 01/15/2003
ENRON CORP. - PRODUCED PURSUANT TO FERC SUBPOENA.
SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER. CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT REQUESTED.
ENRON-537052942538