CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - Most state residents will see a 5 percent drop in electricity rates next month, the first step toward a 15.5 percent decrease, under a plan approved Tuesday by state utility regulators.
The Public Utilities Commission hasn't yet issued a written order, but voted unanimously to approve an amended plan that conforms with the wide-ranging deregulation bill the Legislature passed this year.

Public Service Company President Gary Long said if there are no appeals, and no problems in the details of the written order, customers should be seeing a 16 percent rate drop by the end of the year.
Part of that reduction will be a 5 percent cut by Oct. 1.
Most New Hampshire homeowners would save about $13 off a typical monthly electric bill under a 15.5 percent rate decrease.
Granite State Electric and the New Hampshire Electric Cooperative already have restructured themselves to allow their combined 100,000 customers to buy power from other companies.
