CONFIDENTIAL
Enron Corp.
Case No. EC-2002-01038
Doc No. EAE7D2865
Date: 01/15/2003
ENRON CORP. - PRODUCED PURSUANT TO FERC SUBPOENA.
SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER. CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT REQUESTED.
CONFIDENTIAL - SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER

From: Jeff Dasovich <jeff.dasovich@enron.com>
Sent: Tue, 6 Feb 2001 02:57:00 -0800 (PST)
To: Cameron Sellers <cameron@perfect.com>
Subject: Re: FW: Lark in the Morning

Hi. Apologies. Things have just been nuts. I will get you that access code to EnronOnline just as soon as I can. Hopefully today. Hope all is well.

Best,
Jeff

Cameron Sellers <cameron@perfect.com>
02/05/2001 07:17 PM

To: "'PP'" <psellers@pacbell.net>, "'Prentice (Berkeley)'" <psellers@haas.berkeley.edu>, "'Scott Laughlin'" <scottwl@hotmail.com>, "'Jeff.Dasovich@enron.com'" <Jeff.Dasovich@enron.com>
cc:
Subject: FW: Lark in the Morning

This is something Colleen's brother told me about today. We talk periodically and we always end up talking about bluegrass. He's playing the fiddle. He really wants us to go to this camp. It's not bluegrass oriented enough for me, but it is interesting. Close to the dome too.

Cameron Sellers
Vice President, Business Development
PERFECT
1860 Embarcadero Road - Suite 210
Palo Alto, CA 94303
cameron@perfect.com
650.798.3366 (direct dial)
650.269.3366 (cell)
650.858.1095 (fax)

-----Original Message-----
From: Kevin Silva [mailto:kevins@silvaris.com]
Sent: Monday, February 05, 2001 5:08 PM
To: 'cameron@perfect.com'
Subject: Lark in the Morning

This looks too cool - wish I could go this year. Let me know if your little

CONFIDENTIAL
Enron Corp.
Case No. EC-2002-01038
Doc No. EAE7D2865
Date: 01/15/2003
ENRON CORP. - PRODUCED PURSUANT TO FERC SUBPOENA.
SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER. CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT REQUESTED.
ENRON-1002233414741

CONFIDENTIAL
Enron Corp.
Case No. EC-2002-01038
Doc No. EAE7D2865
Date: 01/15/2003
ENRON CORP. - PRODUCED PURSUANT TO FERC SUBPOENA.
SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER. CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT REQUESTED.
CONFIDENTIAL - SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER

combo goes - maybe we'll make it a family event next year.
Nice chatting with you today.
Kevin

BACK TO CAMP: IT'S A LARK! by Irene D. Thomas "What's the difference between a fiddle and a violin?" teased one of the little signs posted to a tree every 50 yards or so. Whether put there to slow us down on this dusty washboard of a dirt road or to keep first timers hopeful that they were on the right road to music camp, we never were entirely sure. But being a second timer to Lark camp, I had looked forward to the whacko riddles and the answer coming up just around the bend: "You don't care if someone spills beer on a fiddle!"

"Lark in the Morning" music camp provides real and wannabe musicians a week-long escape into the redwood forest near Mendocino for merry music-making, and more. And then some. The camp's organizer and founder, Mickie Zekley, and his wife Elizabeth affectionately call Lark a "musical party with educational overtones." Actually, he explained to me later, it began with just one clear focus: partying. When the party grew to be 100 or more and outgrew his house, he rented the Mendocino Woodlands campground for a weekend each year, sharing the cost and potluck meals with 250 of his best friends.

At first there was no plan or schedule, but then people began teaching each other new instruments and new dances. And that's where the "educational overtones" came in. Although Mickie and his friends' taste run to Celtic and American folk music, (he is the proprietor of Lark in the Morning music shop in Mendocino) the ethnic variety of musicians and instruments began running wildly all over the map, much to the benefit of the 400 or so campers today. In one week I, for one, would personally sample or take part in Bulgarian singing, Greek dancing, Mariachi vocals, swing singing with a band, dumbek drumming, Russian folksongs, Cajun dance, clogging, and "non-threatening beginning guitar." For people like me, middle aged overachievers who never took the time to go to camp or play an instrument---but whose inner child was alive and well--- this was heaven.

In fact, heaven is where I thought I had died and gone when I woke up that first morning with the forest canopy light dappling my tent, the smell of turkish coffee scenting the redwood-laced air, and celestial Andean harp music wafting somewhere nearby like a glorious call to a musical beyond. The only serious decision to be made in this makeshift heaven was whether to sip coffee and nibble pastries at the Tunisian Cafe set up in this section of "quiet camp" or to take the shuttle bus into main camp for a full breakfast and lively conversation around the campfire. Newly dubbed the "not so quiet camp" because the presence of the cafe encouraged late night, impromptu jams of middle eastern drumming, fluting and even some belly dancing, this part of camp still provided an oasis away from crowds when one wanted it. I found it relaxing to be able to retreat here to my tent with a book and flashlight

CONFIDENTIAL
Enron Corp.
Case No. EC-2002-01038
Doc No. EAE7D2865
Date: 01/15/2003
ENRON CORP. - PRODUCED PURSUANT TO FERC SUBPOENA.
SUBJECT TO PROTECTIVE ORDER. CONFIDENTIAL TREATMENT REQUESTED.
ENRON-1002233414741

after a full day of musical socializing.

Many others though-more obsessed, even more greedy not to miss a thing---carried camp on deep into the night, arriving at breakfast late with silly grins and squinted eyes, like hangovers from their musical hightimes. They might have gone to both dances the night before, maybe to Cajun dancing at nine and then Contra dancing at 11, followed by a jam with their favorite group or any group that might have formed itself after midnight in the dining room or on one of the porches. For me, one dance per night was enough, thank you.

The exception was Balkan and Greek night, where the hypnotic, sensuous, often frenetic strains of exotic, mideastern-tinged music grabbed my soul and urged my feet to dance, no matter what. Gotta dance. The rhythm bounces, jerks, syncopates. Step, cross, brush, lift, our leader modelled the steps as we alternately circled or snaked through the dance hall, the music picking up in pace and forcing us to do the same. Glowing with sweat myself, I spied equally sweaty faces grinning wildly back at me, and others with eyes closed in ecstacy. I wondered what scholars of dance have to say about why this style of dance prevailed in so many cultures. Was it the communal urge? A way to share the thrill of music as an act of cultural cohesion? Or was it a primal form of safe, communal sex for the underaged and already marrieds----the circular moving together to music that stirs and satisfies and finally exhausts its partners?

Whatever theory one prefers, hey, this joint is really jumping. Gradually, reluctantly, the crowd disperses, flashlights bouncing in time to the music left behind, humming on the way to tents or cabins or campers. Some teens